Surgery with an Expanding Platform. Calf surgery is a common and important procedure in veterinary medicine, and preoperative planning is essential to a safe and successful outcome. However, current available platforms used for preoperative planning are limited in their ability to provide adequate visualization and are unable to adequately assess the exact location of disease, creating a potential for inaccurate resections. In this study, we sought to determine if using a novel arm with a frame that permits expansion allows for improved visualization and detail of the region of interest. This arm was placed over the calf for operative planning. A total of 5 calf surgery procedures were performed using the frame, and a total of 3 large, soft tissue masses of the distal limb were delineated using the frame.

In addition, the frame was used to simulate extended imaging in a calf with previously undetected fluid and to assist in the excision of a mass that had been previously incorrectly biopsied. Positioning of the frame with the shoulder in 15° of abduction and 30° of flexion was preferred to allow for better visualization of the soft tissue and to achieve the best plan of action, although any position was acceptable. Computed tomography and magnetic resonance imaging improved the detail and soft tissue identification. When used in conjunction with orthopedic 648931e174

My layout is a mixin that I use for my site. It's a bit complicated, though it boils down to I'm having a hard time getting the following code to return just the text area on the page: = section "Footer" .container = yield .container-footer Ideally, I'd like the page to render the whole thing like this: This page needs to output exactly this: Some footer text here... This page actually outputs this: But rather than a separate part, it wants to use the current layout (in this case, the mixin). Is this possible? I can't find any documentation on layout-specific content within
